Market Talk

The market surged to near all-time highs Monday after OPEC oil exporters rejected Western calls to increase output to ease supply pressures and on news that a fire at a European refinery stirring fresh fuel supply concerns. Over the weekend, the secretary general of OPEC, Abdullah al-Badri, rejected calls for an increase in the cartel's crude output, saying that non-fundamental factors were to blame for current high prices. "At the moment there is enough oil in the market and no need to change OPEC's output," Badri said in Tehran late Saturday. "No one can put OPEC under pressure because we decide based on our interests," Badri said. Oil rose despite a slight recovery in the dollar, whose weakness had been a key factor in rising prices. Finnish refiner Neste Oil said repairs and maintenance on a diesel unit at its 200,000-barrel-per-day (bpd) Porvoo refinery would stretch through May following a fire on Friday. The news pushed prices for London gas oil, a fuel closely related to diesel and heating oil, to a record high. Diesel is widely used in Europe as a motor fuel.
